

“Chi si bagna di acqua di mare
non si asciuga più”

WELCOME

What is Nautipedia?

If you are searching for something concerning the sea or boats, a name or a shipyard, a boat, a boat model, a port, a town on the coast, an architect, an information, current or historical, also of commercial nature, know that you are in the right place: here with us we discuss about the Nautical and the sea, only about the Nautical and the sea, without limitations, without ulterior motives, without any political implication or propaganda purpos, with the only aim of collecting and sorting information, details and stories that might otherwise be irretrievably lost.

We called it Nautipedia, the free encyclopedia of the sea, a “cyclopean” collection of on-line information on which historical and current news are transcribed.

History

We are gathering everything that can create a reliable picture of facts and situations of the past, scanning books, magazines, and documents that have made the history of the nautical, collecting testimonies and carrying on numerous researches. The nautical, but especially the Italian nautical, desperately needs it because everything that does not exist in digital format, in Italy, has been scattered, forgotten, and often destroyed.

Present

The information of today is gathered as news and sub-divided in sectors: financial nautical, marine, news and events, as well as the yachting world, and appear in the homepage.

We believe that this setting could be very useful for professionals of the sector and for the fans, and we are working to offer a homepage of the browser with all this information focused, easy to read and as up-to-date and complete as possible.

Our philosophy is that every news should become, as soon as it is posted, an historical fact, encyclopedic, and therefore immediately linked with the other information present on the website, historical and not, which may be of interest, complementary or simply related.

The project

The project has just been born and is almost utopic, constantly evolving and expanding, and it will never be finished, nor will it ever be completely satisfactory, because there is and there will always be an enormity of things to add, link, and deepen.

Copyright

A part of the material posted (copies of photos, articles, printed paper, and WEB) comes from third parties' publications. We try to always report the source and the link, and also any signature of the authors, hoping not to annoy too much copyright and intellectual properties owners.

We undertake, however, to immediately avoid any request for the removal of material subject to copyright and authors' rights by the respective owners, apologizing in advance.

Get involved

Alf, while surfing on Nautipedia, you find what you are searching for we are happy to have provided you a service. But we are even happier if, if you possess information, documents, photos, brochure, or anything else that could complete or create ex novo a title, a category, a page, you could tell us by sending us an email to redazione@nautipedia.it.

You can take part to this by registering and inserting yourself photos, articles' scanners, drawings, documents, or other material.

The technique of inserting information is easy and intuitive, read the related paragraph (click here), but if you want to participate with more “weight”, after we met via WEB, we will entrust you with a tutor to deepen the knowledge of techniques and logics.

It was a pleasure to meet you

Renato Consolaro

THE GIANT NAUTICAL BLOG